COMPOSITION (50 marks)

- Para Paraphrase* Conclusion
Priority protagonist
- 1) Narrate/Describe any two major characters in your selected novel and suggest a suitable theme to their characterization.
  - 2) Write a letter to your friend narrating the plot summary of the novel "The Second Class Citizen". Or The Kaya Girl.
  - 3) Your Boss asked you to order a new dinner service (cups, saucers, plates etc.) for the director's dining room. You ordered one that has gold colored edging. The set was delivered while you were out for lunch, so your colleague signed for it without checking the contents. When you opened the package, you noticed that on various items the gold-colored edging is tarnished and flawed. You cannot accept the goods in this condition. Write a letter to the company and ask them to arrange for a replacement. After compose a suitable reply from the company.
  - 4) You work in the offices of the Southern Star Nursing Hospital. The company has recently redesigned all its stationery (writing paper, memo pads, invoices, company cards, envelopes, etc.) and these are to be issued to all staff next week.
The company Manager, Ms. Zarina Malik, says this to you:
"Could you send a memo to all staff please? Let them know that we will be sending each department a supply of the new stationery later this week. If any department doesn't get it by Friday afternoon, they should let me know."
"Please remind everyone that they must use the new materials immediately, even if they still have a lot of the old stationery. I know this means we might have to waste some of the old material, but we could always use it as scrap paper".
"The new material is well designed and I'm sure all our staff and customers will like it."
"You had better send the memo in my name".
  - 5) You have been invited to deliver a speech during a conference of nursing executives, on the topic. "Communication is key to a successful Health Care Delivery; taking note of the barriers to the communication process". Write out your speech to be delivered at the ceremony.

SECTION: B 20 MARK

Read the following passage carefully and answer ALL the questions on it. (20 Marks)

Okwonkwo never did things by halves. When his wife Ekwefi protested that two goats were sufficient for the feast he told her that it was not her affair.

"I am calling a feast because I have the wherewithal. I cannot live on the bank of the river and was my hand with spittle. My mother's people have been good to me I must show my gratitude. And so three goats were slaughtered and a number of fowls. It was like a wedding feast. There was foo-foo and yam pottage, egusi soup and bitter leaf soup and pots and pots of palm wine.

All the Umunna were invited to the feast, and all the descendants of Oloko, who had lived about two hundred years before. The oldest member of his extensive family was Okonkwos's uncle, Uchendu. The kola nut was given to him to break, and he prayed to the ancestors. He asked them for health and children. "We do not consider wealth because he that has health has wealth. We do not pray to have more money but to have more kinsmen. An animal rubs its itching flank against a tree, a man asks his kinsmen to scratch him." He prayed especially for Okonkwo and his family. He then broke the kola nut and threw one of the lobes on the ground for the ancestors.

As the broken kola nuts were passed round, Okonkwo's wives and children and those who came to help them with the cooking began to bring out the food. His sons brought out the pots of palm-wine. There was so much food and drink that many kinsmen whistled in surprise. When all was laid out, Okonkwo rose to speak. 'I beg you to accept this little kola', he said. 'it is not to pay you back for all you did for me in these several years. A child cannot pay for its mother's milk. I have only called you because it is good for kinsmen to meet.'

Yam pottage was served first because it was lighter than foo-foo and because yam always came first. Then foo-foo was served. Some kinsmen ate it with egusi soup and others with bitter-leaf soup. The meat was then shared so that every member of the Umunna had a portion. Every man rose in order of years and took a share. Even the few kinsmen who had not been able to come had their share taken out for them in due turn.

As the palm-wine was drunk one of the oldest members of the Umunna rose to thank Okonkwo: 'if I say that we did not expect such a big feast I will be suggesting that we did not know how open-handed our son Okonkwo is. We all know him and we expected a big feast. But it turned out to be even bigger than we expected. Thank you. May all you took out return again tenfold. It is good in these days when the younger generation consider themselves wiser than their sire to see a man doing things in the grand, old way. A man who calls his kinsmen to a feast does not do so to save them from starving. They all have food in their homes. When we gather in the moonlit village ground it is not because of the moon. Every man can see it in his own compound. We come together because it is good for kinsmen to do so. You may ask why I am saying this. I say it because I fear for the younger generation, for you people.' He waved his arm where most of the young men sat. 'As for me, I have only a short while to live, and so have Uchendu and Unachukwu and Emefo. But I fear for young people because you do not understand how strong the bond of kinship is.' He turned again to Okonkwo and said, 'Thank you for calling us together.'
